who is a carer?
A carer is someone who looks after a family member, partner or friend who needs help because of a health condition, disability or frailty, and who would not be able to manage without this help. All the care they give is unpaid. The term ‘carer’ does not mean someone who is in paid employment as a care worker.

In the UK today 1 in 10 people (almost seven million) are carers and nearly 6 in 10 carers (58%) are women. Not all carers are adults: there are around 166,000 young carers under 18 in England (2011 census). Every year, more than two million people become carers for the first time.

Some people are carers for a short period of time, others for many years. Most of us provide care for someone else at some point in our lives.

carers and epilepsy
Epilepsy can be different for each person, so the need for care can vary greatly. Some people with epilepsy do not need any additional care from others to live independent lives. Other people with epilepsy may need a lot of care, some or all of the time. Some people only need care when they have had a seizure.

Even if a person does not have seizures very often, the need for care during or after a seizure may be urgent. Seizures can be unpredictable – someone with epilepsy may not be able to plan when they will need help.

If you care for someone with epilepsy, the things you do to support them may include:

- going with them to appointments, helping to take notes, or providing descriptions of seizures to the person with epilepsy and/or their doctor;
- acting as a representative or advocate for the person, with their doctors or others involved in their care;
- joining in with activities that might pose a safety risk if they were to have a seizure, such as swimming;
- providing transport if necessary; and
- helping them to adapt their home or lifestyle to provide a safe living environment.

Any of the above may be very valuable, but may also mean a lot of responsibility for you as a carer.

People with epilepsy may also have other conditions, with additional care needs. Because seizures can be infrequent or unwitnessed by others, epilepsy can be a ‘hidden’ condition. This can mean that other people do not see the need for care. For example, some local authorities providing social services may not always recognise epilepsy as a condition that has particular care needs.

For some people, living with epilepsy can have a psychological impact which may also affect you as their carer. This could include stress, depression or mood changes.

the multi-skilled nature of caring Caring can involve a number of skills: technical tasks such as dealing with medical equipment; emotional support; being able to adapt if needs change; or working with professionals involved in the person’s health or care.

These roles may be in addition to other demands: your family, other relationships, work, home, financial needs, social life, your own health, and your hopes and wishes. You may cope well with multi-tasking in this way, or you may find that some areas of your life are being neglected.
caring and relationships
If your child, parent, partner or friend has epilepsy, you may find that you have a caring role that goes beyond that of being ‘just’ family or friend. It may not be easy to recognise yourself in the role of ‘carer’, or even to see what the additional needs are for your loved one. Often someone’s epilepsy is accepted as part of who they are, so taking on any additional care because of their epilepsy can be seen as ‘just the way it is’.

when situations change
As epilepsy is an individual condition it can change over time. The amount of care you need to provide may become more, or less.

Your own situation could change – you may become less physically able, or have your own health needs. Or you might want to regain some independence. You could even be caring for more than one person, which may cause more strain for you. There may be an expectation from others that you can continue to cope because you always have done before.

looking after yourself
Many people in a caring role find it rewarding, and many would not want their situation to change. However, for some people, being a carer can be exhausting. Emotions such as guilt, resentment, anger, anxiety or helplessness can be common. Some carers give up their income and career prospects to care for someone. Sometimes, even if you care very deeply for the person, it can feel as though the focus is always on them and that your needs and wishes go unnoticed.

It can be very important to look after yourself, and have some time to yourself. Carers often deal with their situation alone and can feel very isolated. If you are a carer, there is information, support and help available.

what help is available?
You may be entitled to a Carer’s assessment. This may identify the need for home help, respite care, emotional support or other services. You can ask your local social services for an assessment, or your GP can ask for this on your behalf.

Some carers can claim Carer’s Allowance. This benefit depends on your income and is usually paid to people over 16, who spend at least 35 hours a week caring for someone who receives Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance or Personal Independence Payment (PIP).

If you are not entitled to Carer’s Allowance you may be able to apply for Carer’s Credit. Carer’s Credit can help you to protect your future entitlement to a state pension.

Visit gov.uk/carers-credit or gov.uk/carers-allowance

For more information about benefits contact your local Benefits agency or visit the benefits section on our website.

Visit epilepsysociety.org.uk/epilepsy-benefits

other organisations Carers Direct
0300 123 1053
nhs.uk/carersdirect
Information for carers from NHS.

Carers Trust
0300 772 9600 (London office)
0300 772 7701 (Glasgow office)
0300 772 9702 (Cardiff office)
carers.org
Provides information, an online community, and local support and services for adult and young carers through its websites. It also offers advice on money and benefits.

Carers UK
0808 808 7777
carersuk.org
Campaigns for better support for carers. Provides information, and practical advice and support.

Self Management
0800 988 556 or from a mobile 0333 445 840
selfmanagementuk.org
Free training courses for adults who care for someone living with a long-term health condition or disability, young carers, and parents of children with life-long conditions.

Care Quality Commission
0300 061 6161
cqc.org.uk/search/services/services-in-your-area
Information to check services that offer care in the home in England.

© Epilepsy Society March 2019
Epilepsy Society, Chesham Lane
Chalfont St Peter, Bucks SL9 0RJ
Registered charity number 206186

Every effort is made to ensure that all information is correct at the time of printing. Please note that information is intended for a UK audience. This information is not a substitute for advice from your own doctors. Epilepsy Society is not responsible for any actions taken as a result of using this information.